Citizenship, Alienage, and the Modern Constitutional State tells the important yet neglected story of marital denaturalization from a comparative perspective. Examining denaturalization laws and their impact on women around the world, with a focus on Australia, Britain, Canada, Ireland, New Zealand and the United States, it advances a concept of citizenship as profoundly personal and existential.

Abstract. This paper is an edited version of the concluding chapter of my book, Citizenship, Alienage and the Modern Constitutional State: A Gendered History (Cambridge University Press 2016) which records and explains the history of citizenship-stripping (“ marital denaturalisation ”) from women who married foreign men (and the parallel conferral, by many countries, of the husband ’ s citizenship: “ marital naturalisation ”), a legal practice that was followed in virtually every country ...
